HARVEST

The 2019 wine year was an atypical year from a climate point of view. Cold and dry winter, cold and extremely rainy spring, and summer in a first phase, cold and rainy and in a second phase hot and extremely dry. With a later budbreak, the occurrence of precipitation throughout the cycle allowed a good vegetative development allowing a recovery of the vineyard, given the water stress of 2018. With good productive potential, climate instability had a significant impact in reducing this potential either by mildew action in June and July, or by scalding and dehydration in August. However, global production did not show significant changes compared to 2018 and provided high quality musts, with high levels of sugar, acidity and phenolic compounds.
